DISCLAIMER

All efforts have been made to verify and collate information about University/Departments included in the Directory. Information has been collected from various sources, namely directories, newsletters, Internet, telephonic verification, letter heads, etc.

However, NIPCCD does not take any responsibility for any error that may inadvertently have crept in.

The telephone numbers, e-mail IDs, focus areas of research, etc. change from time to time, hence NIPCCD may not be held liable for any incorrect information included in the Directory.

Foreword

As a premier organization for furthering the holistic development of newborn and young child, one of the Institute's mandate is to promote voluntary action in the country. Over the past few decades this mandate has brought the voluntary sector closely to Institute's training and research activities. While addressing different issues which the voluntary sector deals with, the Institute has explored a host of sociological issues and their applications at the grassroots level being addressed by voluntary sector. These issues range from understanding the dynamics of communities and society at large, strategies to be adopted while working with people and key stakeholders to evolving welfare and developmental programmes for the people. Social ethos prevailing in communities are vitally linked to ways and practices of people in rearing and nurturing their children. Thus, various sociological inputs constitute a basic requirement of Institute's capacity building endeavour for the voluntary sector. Not only in training efforts but also in conducting various research and documentation work, the Institute extracts inputs from sociology to a great extent. With these in view, the Institute closely functions with the Sociology Departments of various educational institutions and universities.

This directory is likely to be immense value in guiding, motivating and helping students, researchers and teachers as well as lay readers on the latest available information on the institutions dealing with sociology. The directory has been arranged alphabetically for the use of readers.
