Executive Summary

Voluntary sector has emerged as a new force contributing to social development. Flexible and informal systems of functioning are the characteristics of voluntary organizations which allow beneficiaries to have a close link with them. Voluntary organizations are working in diverse areas making them an immutable part of the contemporary development scene. They have grown so much in number that in the absence of any centralized databank or nationally coordinated system of information, it is impossible to provide accurate and precise estimates of the scale and size of the voluntary sector. However, there are an estimated 2 million voluntary initiatives and organizations in the country.

Present document is an attempt to provide information on institutions established and maintained for the reception, care, protection and welfare of women and children licensed under Women's and Children's Institutions (Licensing) Act, 1956. It is an effort to provide a State-wise database on these institutions mentioning briefly their way of functioning and management including their establishment, functioning, activities and management etc. The document provides information about 137 institutions licensed under this Act from 15 States. Information on various facets of the functioning of these institutions has been compiled in a systematic manner in Part A and Profile of individual orphanages/institutions is given in Part B of the document.

This document can be used as a reference by other organizations. It can be used to facilitate the process of building capacities of personnel involved in planning and execution of programmes for the care and protection of these children. This would also enhance networking amongst the development sector.

Introduction

Introduction

India has a long history of voluntarism based on the concepts of daana (giving) and seva (service). During its long journey, volunteerism as the pioneer and the constant driving force behind the voluntary efforts has changed not only in form but also in spirit. In pre-independent India, the voluntary sector was perceived as a charity and, at times, as a vehicle to promote national integration and Independence movement. Voluntary organizations during that period were mainly active in the field of cultural promotion, education, health, and natural disaster and relief. During that period, the Societies Registration Act (SRA) was approved in 1860 to confirm the legal status of the growing body of voluntary organizations (VOs). Gandhian philosophy and the economic and political circumstances served as an inspiration as well as motivated new generations of people to enter the voluntary sector. In the Gandhian era, efforts to further spread the khadi and village industries not only became an important area of voluntary effort but also a governmental responsibility.

The voluntary movement slowly gained momentum in the first two decades in the post Independence era. Followed by the State Emergency in 1975, voluntary efforts entered into a new phase with the government visualizing a special role for voluntary organisations through its programmes such as Adult Education, Integrated Rural Development Programme (IRDP) and block level planning. It resulted in more emphasis on beneficiary groups, more precisely on empowerment of people. During this period, more focused work with target groups e.g. women, children, landless labourers, artisans, small and marginal farmers, scheduled castes and scheduled tribes etc. became the basis of voluntary efforts. The establishment of CAPART as an apex developmental agency for voluntary action in rural development paved the way for the growth of voluntary organisations in the country working in rural development programmes. The year 1953 was a turning point in the history of VO-Government relationships when the government established the Central Social Welfare Board (CSWB) with the primary objective of promoting voluntary efforts in social welfare programmes.

During the 1980s & 90s, with the growing recognition and support of the government and the international donor agencies and the changing paradigm of the concept of development with more emphasis towards people's participation in various development projects contributed towards giving the voluntary sector a distinct third sector status in the civil society. Since then the Government of India, has not only been giving wide recognition to voluntary efforts but also promotes, stimulates and develops voluntary organisations by providing assistance (both financial and technical) in the furtherance of their objectives in the successive Five Year Plan periods.

The First Five Year Plan (1951-56) Document states that "A major responsibility for organised activities in different fields of social welfare falls naturally on private voluntary organisations. The private agencies have since long been working in their own humble way without adequate aid for the achievement of their objectives and their own leadership, organisation and resources. Any plan for social and economic regeneration should take into account services rendered by these agencies and the state should give maximum cooperation in strengthening their efforts". The Third Five Year Plan (1961-66) had characterized voluntary action as an aspect of public cooperation. Discussing people's participation on an ideological level, the Plan Document found it necessary to give it a concrete shape and observed that the concept of cooperation of the people is related in its wider aspect to the sphere of voluntary action in which initiative and motivational responsibility rest completely with the people's leaders. The Fourth Five Year Plan period (1969-74) marked another phase of increasing the governments' cooperation with VOs with the launching of People's Action for Development in India (PADI) in 1973 through which the government channelized funds to VOs. The Sixth Five Year Plan focused on a comprehensive Minimum Needs Programme to provide certain basic social services to the poorest section and distribute justice through programmes of redistribution of assets. The minimum needs programme of the Sixth Five Year Plan for the rural sector focused on elementary education, adult education, rural health, rural water supply, rural roads, rural electrification, nutrition etc. Recognizing the important role of voluntary agencies in accelerating the process of social and economic development, the Seventh Five Year Plan (1985-90) had placed a great deal of emphasis on people's participation and voluntary action in rural development. The Seventh Plan had relied heavily on the VOs in the implementation of anti-poverty and minimum need programmes. The Planning Commission in the approach paper for the Seventh Plan raised the issue of an alternative monitoring machinery to lend a hand to the development bureaucracy for meeting the problem at hand to reach aid with faster pace to the poor. The Commission identified voluntary actions as the alternative mechanism for the purpose by implementing the 20 point programme with a suggestion to set up a consultative group of voluntary actions. In the Seventh Plan, the function and scope of People's Action for Development (PADI) was enlarged and merged with the Council for Advancement of Rural Technology in 1986 to form the Central Nodal Agency namely, Council for Advancement of People's Action and Rural Technology (CAPART). It aimed at encouraging, promoting and assisting voluntary agencies for effective implementation of rural development programmes. It also aimed at introducing professional competence and managerial expertise keeping in view the resources and capabilities of voluntary organisations. In the Eighth Five Year Plan (1992-97), people's initiative and participation became the key elements in the process of development. The Eighth Plan identified human development as its main focus. During this plan, the approach of people's participation was included in programme based strategies creating or strengthening various people's institutions at various levels (districts, block and village levels) in order to optimise benefits at the grass-roots level. During the Eighth Five Year Plan (1992-97) a high level VO-Government Meeting organised by the Planning Commission on 7-8 March, 1994, identified a number of areas for VOs participation. These included: Watershed management, Sanitation and drinking water, integrated rural development, family welfare, education, health, development of women and children, social welfare, labour, science and technology, non-conventional energy sources, urban development dealing with the problems of urban slum dwellers, street children and environment and forests. The Ninth Five Year Plan (1997-2002) Document also conforms to this policy. The plan recognized that the role of the government should be to facilitate the process of involvement of the voluntary organisations by creating the right types of institutional infrastructure.

A gradual and growing interdependence between VOs and the Government in India is also marked in the post-Independence era, particularly in the 1980s and 1990s. The 1990s also saw the establishment of several forums to promote dialogue between the government and NGOs. The Planning Commission initiated an NGO– government interface through a series of conferences and, in 2000, was appointed the nodal agency for NGO–state interactions. In May 2007, the cabinet of ministers of the Government of India approved the “National Policy on the Voluntary Sector” in an effort to evolve a new working relationship between the Government and voluntary organizations. Through the policy, the government commits to encourage, enable, and empower an independent, creative, and effective voluntary sector with diverse form and function, so that it can contribute to the social, cultural, and economic advancement of the people of India. It recognizes that the voluntary sector has contributed significantly to finding innovative solutions to poverty, deprivation, discrimination, and exclusion, through awareness raising, social mobilization, service delivery, training, research, and advocacy.

Voluntary action has also been the priority area of the Institute since its beginning. The Institute, through its training and research initiatives, has tried to build the capacities of institutions working in the field of women and child development. While working with these institutions, it was realized that though these organisations have close interaction with the Institute by participating in training programmes and other initiatives, yet, there is no updated database of these institutions to know their work areas and activities. Therefore, a broad approach was needed wherein updated database is maintained to further build the capacities of personnel of these institutions in the fields they are currently engaged and many other new areas and activities.

Database on Orphanages:

At that point, it was realized to have a state-wise database of the institutions licensed under Women’s and Children’s Institution (Licensing) Act, 1956 to see the coverage of this Act as it provides license to institutions for women and children. Any person desirous to establish and maintain an institution for the reception, care, protection and welfare of women and children should obtain a license under this Act from the State Government. This Act extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu & Kashmir.

Objectives and Methodology:

The objectives of database were (a) to be used as a reference document by other organizations (b) to facilitate the process of building capacities of personnel involved in planning and execution of programmes for the care and protection of these children(c) to facilitate coordination among different institutions with special reference to child protection. As it is a Central Act, information was gathered from all the states on these institutions. A list of the orphanages under Women's and Children's Institution (Licensing) Act, 1956 all over India was prepared along with an exhaustive questionnaire which was mailed to about 950 orphanages/institutions. The Questionnaire contained questions on different aspects of institutions/organization's functioning and activities. This information was, compiled in a systematic manner providing information on various facets of the functioning of these institutions. In response to this, about 137 filled-in proforma's were received from 15 States by the Institute. Accordingly, information was analyzed and compiled in Part A and Profile of individual orphanages/institutions is given in Part B of the document.

Disclaimer: The Institute has only facilitated the process of compiling the information provided by these institutions/orphanages. Therefore, the authenticity of the information lies with the respective orphanages only.

Compiled Information on Institutions

The Institute received 137 proformas from institutions/orphanages. The information received from these institutions included their address, registration status, areas of work, management etc.

The following paragraphs provide information on the functioning of these institutions/orphanages.

Table 1 show that out of 31 States/Union Territories to whom proforma's were sent, institutions/orphanages from only 15 States/union territories responded. The above table shows that out of 137 institutions, majority of institutions were from Manipur (21.13%) followed by Kerala (18.24%), Delhi (13.13%) and Orissa (9.48%).

An effort was made to show the growth of these institutions/ orphanages in different time period by looking at their year of establishment. It was found that most of the institutions were formed during 1966-1975 (18.13%) followed by the time period 1996-2005(14.67%) as India witnessed a rapid increase in and diversification of the NGO sector as a response to the national, political scenario and increasing concern about poverty and marginalization during that period. Children were recognised as an important vulnerable entity during this period and hence, both welfare and empowerment oriented organisations emerged with a focus on development, education, health, environment and livelihood. NGOs began to be recognized as development partners of the State. A total of 26 orphanages did not respond to the question (18.97%).

Table 3 shows that most of the institutions were registered under Societies Registration Act, 1860 (52.13%) followed by Indian Trust Act, 1882 (12.13%), State Societies Registration Act (5.83%) and Orphanages & other Charitable Homes Act, 1960 (5.83%). Out of 137 institutions/orphanages, 28 of them did not respond to this question (20.13%). Societies Registration Act, 1860 is the oldest legislation and number of registrations under this Act shows the familiarity of the Act within voluntary organizations. Data received showed that only one institution had been registered under the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Amendment Act, 2006 which is an indication that these institutions are not aware that now it is now mandatory for institutions working for the care and protection of children to be registered under the JJ (Amendment) Act, 2006.

Data in Table No 4 shows that only 41 institutions were licensed under Women and Children Licensing Act, 1956 (29.92%). Rest of the institutions were either not licensed or did not respond to this question.

Preparation of budget is required in almost all the institutions to plan for future activities. Budget is an approximation and an estimate of the income and expenditure. Budgeting is essentially about planning for future and the way in which the resources of the institution/organisation may be best used to achieve the goals of the organisation. Table 4 shows the approximate annual budget of these organisations. It shows that most of the organisations had an annual budget between 1-5 Lakhs (20.43%) followed by 6-10 lakhs (17.51%). Some of the institutions (8) were also having the annual budget between 16-20 lakhs (5.83%). Interestingly, two institutions from Maharashtra and one institution from Orissa had the annual budget between 1-5 Crores (2.18%).

Sustainable work of an institution, undoubtedly, depends on its source of income. Voluntary organizations try to generate income through different sources to attain sustainability. Table 6 shows that the source of income of 78 institutions out of 137 institutions/orphanages was cash (57 %) whereas 60 institutions (44%) received donations through kind. Other contributions included labour (20.43%), donations (7.30%), government aid (6.57%). Forty three (43) institutions (31.39%) did not respond to this question.

Table 7 shows that out of 137 institutions/orphanages, 69 institutions were having their own building to run their programmes (50.37%). Other 22 institutions were functioning in hired accommodations (16.05%) and 14 of them were functioning through donated accommodations (10.21%). 32 institutions did not respond to this question (23.35%).

5.	Children of prostitute	2	1.45
6.	Run away children	9	6.56
7.	No response	3	2.18

As per the objectives, institutions/orphanages deal with different categories of children needing care and protection. It was seen that the main objective of these institutions/orphanages was to look after and provide shelter to these children needing care and protection. Table 8 shows that more than 50% of the institutions were catering to orphan children (63.50%) followed by destitute children (61.31) and street children (10.21%). There were few organisations catering to children with parents (12.40%), run-away children (6.56%) and children of prostitutes (1.45%). The information shows that these institutions/orphanages covered all the categories of children in need of care and protection.

Maintaining separate homes for boys and girls is an essential requirement as per the standard of care being prescribed by Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Amendment Act, 2006. Table 9 shows that most of the institutions/orphanages conform to this norm (87.59%). However, the percentage of institutions which were not providing separate services was very low (2.91). Out of 137 institutions, 13 of them did not respond to this question.

In every institution, providing good, hygienic food and purified water is one of the components in minimum standards of care. Table 10 shows that 80 per cent of the institutions/orphanages were providing safe drinking water to the children. Only one institution did not provide them with safe drinking water while the other 26 institutions did not respond to this question. As far as nutritional food was concerned, more than 50 per cent (62.78%) institutions provided the food with the nutritional expert's advice whereas 16 per cent institutions/orphanages prepared food without consulting the nutritional expert. Out of 137 institutions, 29 institutions did not respond to this question (21.16%).

For effective functioning of the institutions/orphanages, formation of the Managing Committee is important. Table 11 shows the status of constitution of Managing Committee in these institutions. Out of 137 institutions, 79 per cent institutions constituted the Managing Committee to look after the day to day functioning of the institution. Only 2 institutions did not have the Managing Committee and 27 of them did not respond to the question (20%).

It is important to know how active these managing committees are, for effective functioning of the institutions. It was good to know that about half of these institutions (50.36%) were meeting once a month followed by 54 institutions (39.41%) discussing things quarterly, 6 of them (4.37%) and finally 8 institutions having a meeting once in a year. It is a good indication that these orphanages/institutions are active and not sleeping for good work to happen.

Every State Government has the responsibility to monitor the functioning of the institutions working for the care and protection of the children. According to table 13, 69 per cent institutions were inspected by the State Government at regular intervals. Out of 137 institutions, 8 institutions said that no one inspected their institution from Government (5.13%) and 35 institutions did not respond to this question (25.54%).

While collecting data from these organisations, it was observed that they were catering to different age groups of children. Most of the institutions were looking after the needs of the children falling in the age group of 0-18 years (32.84%) followed by the age groups 5-18 years(10.21%) and 0-21 years (9.48%) respectively. There were institutions catering to many other age groups, the percentage of which was small.

4.	No response	49	35.76

The ultimate aim of these institutions/orphanages was to rehabilitate and give them a direction to do something useful in life. Out of 137 institutions, 68 of them provided vocational training in some of the trades in order to help them get jobs and earn their livelihood (49.63%) whereas 50 per cent institutions left them to be independent and to choose their own way. Institutions which were looking after girls tried to settle them down through marriages (32.84%). There were four orphanages which rehabilitated children through adoption and rest 49 of them did not provide information on the rehabilitation of children in their institutions.

Table-16

After rehabilitating the child in the society, follow up is usually done to see the success of such an effort. It was gathered that in most of the institutions (94.89%), rehabilitation process was followed by follow up of such cases to know the well being of children. Only 6 institutions (4.13%) did not do any kind of follow up and one institution did not respond to the question.

Summary:

Voluntary Organizations are known for flexible and people-centered sustainable development focused to enhance human growth and well being. There is a clear shift in emphasis in the voluntary sector from care, charity and welfare towards empowerment, development and change. Today, voluntary organizations are registered under different Acts prevailing in our country and enjoy a legal status. The focus of present document was to collate information on different institutions licensed under Women and Children Licensing Act, 1956. It was seen that only 30 % of institutions were registered under this Act. It was observed that these institutions were mainly dealing with orphan and destitute children while other type of children needing care and protection were also visible. Different institutions were catering to the needs of different age groups starting from 0 to 18 years of age. It was seen that to sustain their activities and providing care to children, these institutions were mostly relying on cash, kind, donations and government grants with a annual budget ranging from 1 lakh to 30 lakhs with few institutions having budget of 1-3 crores. Making orphan and destitute children independent and constructive citizens of the country as their main aim, these institutions provided them facilities and engaged them in various activities like education, vocational training, inculcating moral values and maintaining discipline etc. Managing Committees were found to be present with meetings of members at regular intervals in most of the institutions for effective functioning and management. It was astonishing to know that most of these institutions maintained the minimum standards of care for children in terms of having separate facilities of boys and girls, providing neat and hygienic food and meeting their medical requirements in the limited resources that they had. It indicated their knowledge of managing the institutions as per prescribed rules. As mentioned earlier, for making them good and constructive citizens of the society, these institutions tried to rehabilitate children in their institutions through various ways. In case of girls, marriage was considered to be the good option for their settlement whereas boys were given the choice of being independent and make their life purposeful. Institutions also helped all the children to find jobs after being trained in trades of their choice. It was seen that most of the institutions practiced follow up programme after the release of the child to see whether they are settled and stable. To summarize, it would be appropriate to mention that these institutions are making a good attempt to provide care and protection to deserving children in their limited resources.

Conclusion:

India has a vibrant voluntary sector committed to the cause of children. The voluntary sector is regulated by multiple laws and authorities, its credibility is often questioned by most stakeholders groups due to lack information (about existence, performance, finances, output and outcome), absence of performance benchmarks, Government licenses and permissions not being sufficient indicators of performance or credibility and the general lack of awareness of the common man about the voluntary sector. Voluntary organisations are supposed to be registered under various acts prevailing in our country. It is seen that there is no uniform accounting or reporting framework under these Acts that applies to all Voluntary organisations.

However, a child friendly system can become a reality only with the involvement of responsive, vigilant and innovative voluntary organisations willing to work closely with all the stake-holders. A child centered approach demands quality care for children in institutions and a system of maintaining standards of care in institutions through processes of licensing, certification and effective monitoring. The National Policy for Children emphasises an enabling environment for Voluntary organizations that stimulates their enterprise and effectiveness, and safeguards their autonomy. It also states the need for an alternate central law for registration of voluntary organisations, the setting up of an independent, national level, self regulatory agency for the voluntary sector, setting up benchmarks in good governance and many other things. Presently, Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Amendment Act, 2006 is one such act which demands for registration of all the existing as well as new voluntary organisations working for the care and protection of children to be registered under it. Through standards of maintaining an institutions and care provided to children, prescribed in the Act, uniformity is expected to be maintained in various aspects of functioning and management of these institutions.
